

Multivariate approaches often assume that each example is drawn from a multivariate process. Thus, we need not assume that the features are independent. Multivariate change detection attempts to model a multivariate process by means of a function to evaluate the fit of new data (an example or a batch) to that model.